CHAPTER XXVI.
DE GARCIA SPEAKS HIS MIND.

At first I was taken into the chamber that I had left, but placed in a little room opening out of it where the guard slept. Here I waited awhile, bound hand and foot and watched by two soldiers with drawn swords. As I waited, torn by rage and fear, I heard the noise of hammering through the wall, followed by a sound of groans.

At length the suspense came to an end. A door was opened, and two fierce Tlascalan Indians came through it and seized me by the hair and ears, dragging me thus into my own chamber.

"Poor devil!" I heard one of the Spanish soldiers say as I went. "Apostate or no, I am sorry for him. This is bloody work."

Then the door closed, and I was in the place of torment. The room was darkened, for a cloth had been hung in front of the window bars, but its gloom was relieved by certain fires that burned in braziers. It was by the light of these fires chiefly that I saw the sight. On the floor of the chamber were placed three solid chairs, one of them empty. The other two were filled by none other than Guatemoc, emperor of the Aztecs, and by his friend and mine, the cazique of Tacuba. They were bound in the chairs, the burning braziers were placed at their feet, behind them stood a clerk with paper and inkhorn, and around them Indians were busy at some dreadful task, directed to it by two Spanish soldiers. Near the third chair stood another Spaniard, who as yet took no part in the play. It was De Garcia. As I looked an Indian lifted one of the braziers, and seizing the naked foot of the Tacuban prince thrust it down upon the glowing coals. For awhile there was silence; then the Tacuban broke into groans. Guatemoc turned his head toward him and spoke, and as he spoke I saw that his foot also was resting in the flames of a brazier. "Why do you complain, friend," he said in a steady voice, "when I keep silence? Am I then taking my pleasure in a bed? Follow me now as always, friend, and be silent beneath your sufferings."

The clerk wrote down his words, for I heard the quill scratching on the paper, and as he wrote Guatemoc turned his head and saw me. His face was gray with pain. Still he spoke as a hundred times I had heard him speak at council—slowly and clearly. "Alas, are you also here, my friend Teule?" he said. "I hoped that they had spared you. See how these Spaniards keep faith. Malinche swore to treat me with all honor. Behold how he honors me, with hot coals for my feet and pinchers for my flesh. They think that we have buried treasure, Teule, and would wring its secret from us. You know that it is a lie. If we had treasure, would we not give it gladly to our conquerors, the god born sons of Quetzal? You know that there is nothing left except the ruins of our cities and the bones of our dead."

Here he ceased suddenly, for the demon who tormented him struck him across the mouth, saying, "Silence, dog!"

But I understood, and I swore in my heart that I would die ere I revealed my brother's secret. This was the last triumph that Guatemoc could win, to keep his gold from the grasp of the greedy Spaniard, and that victory at least he should not lose through me. So I swore, and very soon my oath must be put to the test, for at a motion from De Garcia the Tlascalans seized me and bound me to the third chair.

Then he spoke into my ear in Castilian: "Strange are the ways of Providence, Cousin Wingfield. You have hunted me across the world, and several times we have met, always to your sorrow. I thought I had you in the slaveship. I thought that the sharks had you in the water, but somehow you escaped, me whom you came to hunt. When I knew it, I grieved, but now I grieve no more, for I see that you were reserved for this moment. Cousin Wingfield, it shall go hard if you escape me this time, and yet I think that we shall spend some days together before we part. Now I will be courteous with you. You may have a choice of evils. How shall we begin? The resources at my command are not all that we could wish, alas; the holy office is not yet here with its unholy armory, but still I have done my best. These fellows do not understand their art. Hot coals are their only inspiration. I, you see, have several," and he pointed to various instruments of torture. "Which will you select?"

I made no answer, for I had determined that I would speak no word and utter no cry, do what they might with me.

"Let me think, let me think," went on De Garcia, smoothing his beard. "Ah, I have it! Here, slaves."

Now I will not renew my own agonies or awake the horror of any who may chance to read what I have written by describing what befell me after this. Suffice it to say that for two hours and more this devil, helped in his task by the Tlascalans, worked his wicked will upon me. One by one torments were administered to me with a skill and ingenuity that cannot often have been surpassed, and when at times I fainted I was recovered by cold water being dashed upon me and spirits poured down my throat. And yet, I say it with some pride, during those two dreadful hours I uttered no groan, however great my sufferings, and spoke no word, good or bad.

Nor was it only bodily pain that I must bear, for all this while my enemy mocked me with bitter words, which tormented my soul as his instruments and hot coals tormented my body. At length he paused exhausted and cursed me for an obstinate pig of an Englishman, and at that moment Cortes entered the shambles, and with him Marina.

"How goes it?" he said lightly, though his face turned pale at the sight of horror.

"The cazique of Tacuba has confessed that gold is buried in his garden. The other two have said nothing, general," the clerk answered, glancing down his paper.

"Brave men, indeed!" I heard Cortes mutter to himself. Then said aloud: "Let the cazique be carried tomorrow to the garden of which he speaks, that he may point out the gold. As for the other two, cease tormenting them for this day. Perhaps they may find another mind before tomorrow. I trust so—for their own sakes I trust so!"

Then he drew to the corner of the room and consulted with Sarceda and the other torturers, leaving Marina face to face with Guatemoc and me. For awhile she stared at the prince as though in horror; then a strange light came into her beautiful eyes, and she spoke to him in a low voice, saying in the Aztec tongue:

"Do you remember how once you rejected me down yonder in Tabasco, Guatemoc, and what I told you then—that I should grow great in spite of you? You see, it has all come true, and more than true, and you are brought to this. Are you not sorry, Guatemoc? I am sorry, though were I as some women are perchance I might rejoice to see you thus."

"Woman," the prince answered in a thick voice, "you have betrayed your country, and you have brought me to shame and torment. Yes; had it not been for you these things had never been. I am sorry, indeed I am sorry—that I did not kill you. For the rest, may your name be shameful forever in the ears of honest men and your soul be everlastingly accursed, and may you yourself, even before you die, know the bitterness of dishonor and betrayal! Your words were fulfilled, and so shall mine be also."

She hissed and turned away, trembling and for awhile was silent. Then her glance fell upon me, and she began to weep.

"Alas, poor man!" she said. "Alas, my friend!"

"Weep not over me, Marina," I answered, speaking in Aztec, "for your tears are of no worth, but help me if you may."

"Ah, that I could!" she sobbed, and turning fled from the place, followed presently by Cortes.

Now the Spaniards came in again and removed Guatemoc and the cazique of Tacuba, carrying them in their arms, for they could not walk, and indeed the cazique was in a swoon.

"Farewell, Teule," said Guatemoc as he passed me. "You are indeed a true son of Quetzal and a gallant man. May the gods reward you in times to come, for all that you have suffered for me and mine, since I cannot."

Then he was borne out, and these were the last words that I ever heard him utter.

Now I was left alone with the Tlascalans and De Garcia, who mocked me as before.

"A little tired, eh, friend Wingfield?" he said, sneering. "Well, the play is rough till you get used to it. A night's sleep will refresh you, and tomorrow you will be a new man. Perhaps you believe that I have done my worst. Fool, this is but a beginning. Also you think doubtless that your obstinacy angers me. Wrong again, my friend. I only pray that you may keep your lips sealed to the last. Gladly would I give my share of this hidden gold in payment for two more such days with you. I have still much to pay you back, and, look you, I have found a way to do it. There are more ways of hurting a man than through his own flesh—for instance, when I wished to be revenged upon your father, I struck him through her whom he loved. Now I have touched you, and you wonder what I mean. Well, I will tell you. Perhaps you may know an Aztec lady of royal blood who is named Otomie?"

"Otomie, what of her?" I cried, speaking for the first time, since fear for her stirred me more than all the torments I had borne.

"A triumph indeed! I have found a way to make you speak at last. Why, then, tomorrow you will be full of words. Only this, Cousin Wingfield. Otomie, Montezuma's daughter, a very lovely woman, by the way, is your wife according to the Indian customs. Well, I know all the story, and—she is in my power. I will prove it to you, for she will be brought here presently, and then you can console each other. For listen, dog; tomorrow she will sit where you are sitting, and before your eyes she shall be dealt with as you have been dealt with. Ah, then you will talk fast enough, but perhaps it will be too late."

And now for the first time I broke down and prayed for mercy even of my foe.

"Spare her," I groaned. "Do what you will with me, but spare her! Surely you must have a heart, even you, for you are human. You can never do this thing, and Cortes would not suffer it."

"As for Cortes," he answered, "he will know nothing of it—till it is done. I have my warrant that charges me to use every means in my power to force the truth from you. Torture has failed; this alone is left. And for the rest you must read me ill. You know what it is to hate, for you hate me. Multiply your hate by 10, and you may find the sum of mine for you. You came to take vengeance on me, and soon or later by you or through you it will be glutted, but till then I triumph—aye, even when I must sink to this butcher's work to do it," and suddenly he turned and left the place.

Then weakness and suffering overcame me, and I swooned away. When I awoke, it was to find that my bonds had been loosed, and that I lay on some sort of bed, while a woman bent over me, tending me with murmured words of pity and love. The night had fallen, but there was light in the chamber, and by it I saw that the woman was none other than Otomie, no longer starved and wretched, but almost as lovely as before the days of siege and hunger.

"Otomie, you here!" I gasped through my wounded lips, for with my senses came the memory of De Garcia's threats.

"Yes, beloved, it is I," she muttered. "They have suffered that I nurse you, devils though they are! Oh, that I must see you thus and yet be helpless to avenge you!" and she burst into weeping.

"Hush," I said, "hush! Have we food?"

"In plenty. A woman brought it from Marina."

"Give me to eat, Otomie."

Now for awhile she fed me, and the deadly sickness passed from me, though my poor flesh burned with a hundred agonies.

"Listen, Otomie. Have you seen De Garcia?"

"No, husband. Two days since I was separated from my sister Tecuichpo and the other ladies, but I have been well treated and have seen no Spaniard except the soldiers who led me here, telling me that you were sick. Alas! I knew not from what cause!" and again she began to weep.

"Still some have seen you, and it is reported that you are my wife."

"It is likely enough," she answered, "for it was known throughout the Aztec hosts, and such secrets cannot be kept. But why have they treated you thus? Because you fought against them?"

"Are we alone?" I asked.

"The guard is without, but there is none else in the chamber."

"Then bend down your head, and I will tell you," and I told her all.

When I had done so, she sprang up with flashing eyes, and her hand pressed upon her breast and said:

"Oh, if I loved you before, now I love you more if that is possible, who could suffer thus horribly and yet be faithful to the fallen and your oath! Blessed be the day when first I looked upon your face, O my husband, most true of men! But they who could do this—what of them? Still it is done with, and I will nurse you back to health. Surely it is done with, or they had not suffered me to come to you."

"Alas, Otomie, I must tell all—it is not done with," and with faltering voice I went on with the tale—yes, and since I must I told her for what purpose she had been brought here. She listened without a word, though her lips turned pale.

"Truly," she said when I had done, "these Teules far surpass the pabas of our people, for if the priests torture and sacrifice it is to the gods and not for gold and secret hate. Now, husband, what is your counsel? Surely you have some counsel."

"I have none that I dare offer, wife," I groaned.

"You are timid as a girl who will not utter the love she burns to tell," Otomie answered, with a proud and bitter laugh. "Well, I will speak it for you. It is in your mind that we must die tonight."

"It is," I said. "Death now, or shame and agony tomorrow, and then death at last, that is our choice. Since God will not protect us, we must protect ourselves if we can find the means."

"God! There is no God. At times I have doubted the gods of my people and turned to yours. Now I renounce and reject him. If there were a God of mercy such as you cling to, could he suffer that such things be? You are my god, husband. To you and for you I pray, and you alone. Let us have done now with pleading to those who are not, or who, if they live, are deaf to our cries and blind to our misery, and befriend ourselves. Yonder lies rope; that window has bars; very soon we can be beyond the sun and the cruelty of Teules or sound asleep. But there is time yet. Let us talk awhile. They will scarcely begin their torments before the dawn, and ere dawn we shall be far."

So we talked as well as my sufferings would allow. We talked of how we first had met; of how Otomie had been vowed to me as the wife of Tezcat, soul of the world; of that day when we had lain side by side upon the stone of sacrifice; of our true marriage thereafter; of the siege of Tenoctitlan and the death of our firstborn. Thus we talked till midnight was two hours gone; then there came a silence.

"Husband," said Otomie at last in a hushed and solemn voice, "you are worn with suffering, and I am weary. It is time to do that which must be done. Sad is our fate, but at least rest is before us. I thank you, husband, for your gentleness. I thank you more for your faithfulness to my house and people. Shall I make ready for our last journey?"

"Make ready!" I answered.

Then she rose and soon was busy with the ropes. At length all was prepared, and the moment of death was at hand.

"You must aid me, Otomie," I said. "I cannot walk by myself."

She came and lifted me with her strong and tender arms till I stood upon a stool beneath the window bars. There she placed the rope about my throat; then taking her stand by me she fitted the second rope upon her own. Now we kissed in solemn silence, for there was nothing more to say. Yet Otomie said something, asking:

"I come to save you if I can."

"Of whom do you think in this moment, husband? Of me and of my dead child; or of that lady who lives far across the sea? Nay, I will not ask. I have been happy in my love; it is enough. Now love and life must end together, and it is well for me, but for you I grieve. Say, shall I thrust away the stool?"

"Yes, Otomie, since there is no hope but death. I cannot break my faith with Guatemoc, nor can I live to see you shamed and tortured."

"Then kiss me first and for the last time."

We kissed again, and then, as she was in the very act of pushing the stool from beneath us, the door opened and shut, and a veiled woman stood before us, bearing a torch in one hand and a bundle in the other. She looked, and seeing us and our dreadful purpose ran to us.

"What do you?" she cried, and I knew the voice for that of Marina. "Are you then mad, Teule?"

"Who is this who knows you so well, husband, and will not even suffer that we die in peace?" asked Otomie.

"I am Marina," answered the veiled woman, "and I come to save you if I can."

CHAPTER XXVII.
THE ESCAPE.

Now Otomie put the rope off her neck, and descending from the stool stood before Marina.

"You are Marina," she said coldly and proudly, "and you come to save us, you who have brought ruin on the land that bore you and have given thousands of her children to death and shame and torment? Now, if I had my way, I would have none of your salvation—nay, I would rather save myself as I was about to do."

Thus Otomie spoke, and never had she looked more royal than in this moment when she risked her last chance of life that she might pour out her scorn upon one whom she deemed a traitress—no, one who was a traitress, for had it not been for Marina's wit and aid Cortes would never have conquered Anahuac. I trembled as I heard her angry words, for, all I suffered notwithstanding, life still seemed sweet to me, who, 10 seconds ago, had stood upon the verge of death.

Surely Marina would depart and leave us to our doom. But it was not so. Indeed she shrank and trembled before Otomie's contempt. They were a strange contrast in their different loveliness as they stood face to face in the torture den, and it was strange also to see the spirit of the lady of royal blood, threatened as she was with a shameful death or still more shameful life, triumph over the Indian girl whom today fortune had set far above her as the stars.

"Say, royal lady," asked Marina in her gentle voice, "for what cause did you, if tales are true, lie by the side of yonder white man upon the stone of sacrifice?"

"Because I love him, Marina."

"And for this same cause have I, Marina, laid my honor upon a different altar; for this same cause I have striven against the children of my people, because I love another such as he. It is for love of Cortes that I have aided Cortes; therefore despise me not, but let your love plead for mine, seeing that, to us women, love is all. I have sinned, I know, but doubtless in its season my sin shall find a fitting punishment."

"It had need be sharp," answered Otomie. "My love has harmed none. See before you but one grain of the countless harvest of your own. In yonder chair Guatemoc, your king, was this day tortured by your master, Cortes, who swore to treat him with all honor. By his side sat Teule, my husband and your friend. Him Cortes gave over to his private enemy, De Garcia, whom you name Sarceda. See how he has left him. Nay, do not shudder, gentle lady. Look now at his wounds! Consider to what a pass we are driven when you find us about to die thus like dogs, he, my husband, that he may not live to see me handled as he has been, and I with him because a princess of the Otomie and of Montezuma's blood cannot submit to such a shame while death has one door through which to creep. It is but a single grain of your harvest, outcast and traitoress, the harvest of misery and death that is stored yonder in the ruins of Tenoctitlan. Had I my will I tell you that I had sooner die a score of times than take help from a hand so stained with the blood of my people and of yours—I!"——

"Oh, cease, lady, cease," groaned Marina, covering her eyes with her hand, as though the sight of Otomie were dreadful to her. "What is done is done. Do not add to my remorse. What did you say—that you, the Lady Otomie, were brought here to be tortured?"

"Even so, and before my husband's eyes. Why should Montezuma's daughter and the princess of the Otomie escape the fate of the emperor of the Aztecs? If her womanhood does not protect her, has she anything to hope of her lost rank?"

"Cortes knows nothing of this; I swear it," said Marina. "To the rest he has been driven by the clamor of the soldiers, who taunt him with stealing treasure that he has never found. But of this last wickedness he is innocent."

"Then let him ask his tool Sarceda of it."

"As for Sarceda, I promise you, princess, that if I can I will avenge this threat upon him. But time is short. I am come here with the knowledge of Cortes to see if I can win the secret of the treasure from Teule, your husband, and for my friendship's sake I am about to betray my trust and help him and you to fly. Do you refuse my aid?"

Otomie said nothing, but I spoke for the first time.

"Nay, Marina, I have no love for this thief's fate if I can escape it, but how is it to be done?"

"The chance is poor enough, Teule, but I bethought me that once out of this prison you might slip away disguised. Few will be stirring at dawn, and of them the most will not be keen to notice men or things. See, I have brought you the dress of a Spanish soldier. Your skin is dark, and in the half light you might pass as one, and for the princess your wife I have brought another dress. Indeed I am ashamed to offer it, but it is the only one that will not be noted at this hour; also, Teule, I bring you a sword, that which was taken from you, though I think that once it had another owner."

Now while she spoke Marina undid her bundle, and there in it were the dresses and the sword, the same that I had taken from the Spaniard Diaz in the massacre of the noche triste. First she drew out the woman's robe and handed it to Otomie, and I saw that it was such a robe as among the Indians is worn by the women who follow camps, a robe with red and yellow in it. Otomie saw it also and drew back.

"Surely, girl, you have brought a garment of your own in error," she said quietly, but in such a fashion as showed more of the savage heart that is native to her race than she often suffered to be seen. "At the least I cannot wear such robes."

"It seems that I must bear too much," answered Marina, growing wroth at last and striving to keep back the tears that started to her eyes. "I will away and leave you," and she began to roll up her bundle.

"Forgive her, Marina," I said hastily, for the desire to escape grew on me every minute. "Sorrow has set an edge upon her tongue." Then, turning to Otomie, I added: "I pray you be more gentle, wife, for my sake if not for your own. Marina is our only hope."

"Would that she had left us to die in peace, husband. Well, so be it, for your sake I will put on these garments of a drab. But how shall we escape out of this place and the camp? Will the door be opened to us and the guards removed, and if we pass them can you walk, husband?"

"The doors will not be opened, lady," said Marina, "for those wait without who will see that they are locked when I have passed them. But there will be nothing to fear from the guard—trust to me for it. See, the bars of this window are but of wood. That sword will soon sever them, and if you are seen you must play the part of a drunken soldier being guided to his quarters by a woman. For the rest I know nothing, save that I run great risk for your sakes, since, if it is discovered that I had aided you, then I shall find it hard to soften the rage of Cortes, who, the war being won," and she sighed, "does not need me now so much as once he did."

"I can make shift to hop on my right foot," I said, "and for the rest we must trust to fortune. It can give us no worse gifts than those we have already."

"So be it, Teule, and now farewell, for I dare stay no longer. I can do nothing more. May your good star shine on you and lead you hence in safety, and, Teule, if we never meet again, I pray you think of me kindly, for there are many in the world who will do otherwise in the days to come."

"Farewell, Marina," I said, and she was gone.

We heard the doors close behind her and the distant voices of those who bore her litter; then all was silence. Otomie listened at the window for awhile, but the guards seemed to be gone, where or why I do not know to this hour, and the only sound was that of distant revelry from the camp.

"And now to the work," I said to Otomie.

"As you wish, husband, but I fear it will be profitless. I do not trust that woman. Faithless in all, without doubt she betrays us. Still at the worst you have the sword and can use it."

"It matters little," I answered. "Our plight cannot be worse than it is now. Life has no greater evils than torment and death, and they are with us already."

Then I sat upon the stool, and my arms being left sound and strong I hacked with the sharp sword at the wooden bars of the window, severing them one by one till there was a space big enough for us to creep through. This being done and no one having appeared to disturb us, Otomie clad me in the clothes of a Spanish soldier which Marina had brought, for I could not dress myself. What I suffered in the donning of those garments and more especially in pulling of the long boot on to my burned foot can never be told, but more than once I stopped, pondering whether it would not be better to die rather than to endure such agonies. At last it was done, and Otomie must put on the red and yellow robe, a garb of shame such as many an honest Indian woman would die sooner than be seen in, and I think that as she did this her agony was greater than mine, though of another sort, for to her proud heart that dress was a very shirt of Nessus. Presently she was clad and minced before me with a savage mockery, saying:

"Prithee, soldier, do I look my part?"

"A peace to such fooling," I answered. "Our lives are at stake. How does it matter how we disguise ourselves?"

"It matters much, husband, but how can you understand, who are a man and a foreigner? Now I will clamber through the window, and you must follow me if you can. If not, I will return to you, and we will end this masquerade."

Then she passed through the hole swiftly, for Otomie was agile and strong as an ocelot, and mounting the stool I made shift to follow her as well as my hurts would allow. In the end I was able to throw myself upon the sill of the window, and there I was stretched out like a dead cat till she drew me across it, and I fell with her to the ground on the farther side and lay groaning. She lifted me to my feet, or rather to my foot, for I could use but one of them, and we stared round us. No one was to be seen, and the sound of revelry had died away, for the crest of Popo was already red with the sunlight, and the dawn grew in the valley.

"Where to?" I said.

Now, Otomie had been allowed to walk in the camp with her sister, the wife of Guatemoc, and other Aztec ladies, and she had this gift in common with most Indians—that where she had once passed there she could pass again, even in the darkest night.

"To the south gate," she whispered. "Perhaps it is unguarded now that the war is done. At the least, I know the road thither."

So we started, I leaning on her shoulder and hopping on my right foot, and thus very painfully we traversed some 300 yards, meeting nobody. But now our good luck failed us, for passing round the corner of some buildings we came face to face with three soldiers returning to their huts from a midnight revel and with them some native servants.

"Whom have we here?" said the first of them. "Your name, comrade."

"Good night, brother, good night," I answered in Spanish, speaking with the thick voice of drunkenness.

"Good morning, you mean," he said, for the dawn was breaking. "Your name? I don't know your face, though it seems that you have been in the wars." And he laughed.

"You mustn't ask a comrade his name," I said solemnly and swinging to and fro. "The captain might send for me, and he's a temperate man. Your arm, girl. It is time to go to sleep. The sun sets."

They laughed, but one of them addressed Otomie, saying:

"Leave the sot, my pretty, and come and walk with us." And he caught her by the arm. But she turned on him with so fierce a look that he let her go again, astonished, and we staggered on till the corner of another house hid us from their view. Here I sank to the ground overcome with pain, for while the soldiers were in sight I was obliged to use my wounded foot lest they should suspect. But Otomie pulled me up, saying:

"Alas, beloved, we must pass on or perish."

I rose, groaning, and by what efforts I reached the south gate I cannot describe, though I thought that I must die before I came there. At last it was before us, and, as chance would have it, the Spanish guard were asleep in the guardhouse. Three Tlascalans only were crouched over a little fire, their serapes or blankets about their heads, for the dawn was chilly.

"Open the gate, dog!" I said in a proud voice.

Seeing a Spanish soldier, one of them rose to obey, then paused and said:

"Why and by whose orders?"

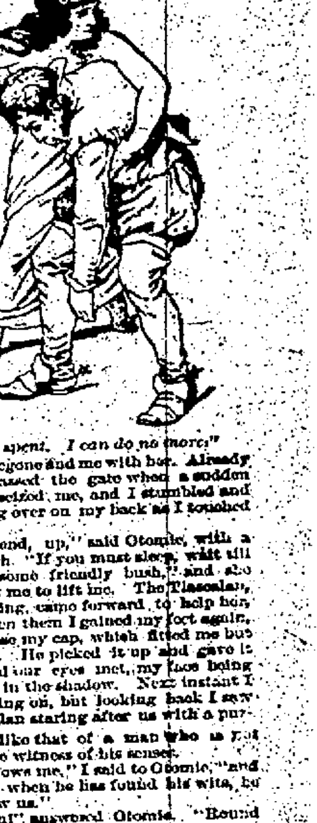
I could not see the man's face because of the blanket, but his voice sounded familiar to me, and I grew afraid. Still I must speak.

"Why? Because I am drunk and wish to lie without till I grow sober. By whose orders? By mine. I am an officer of the day, and if you disobey I'll have you flogged till you never ask another question."

"Shall I call the Teules within?" said the man sulkily to his companion.

"No," he answered. "The Lord Sarceda is weary and gave orders that he should not be awakened without good cause. Keep them in or let them through, as you will, but do not wake him."

I trembled in every limb. De Garcia was in the guardhouse! What if he awoke! What if he came out and saw me! More, now I guessed whose voice it was that I knew again. It was that of one of three Tlascalans who had aided in tormenting me. What if he should see my face! He could scarcely fail to know that on which he had left his mark so recently. I was dumb with fear and could say nothing, and had it not been for the wit of Otomie there my story would have ended. But now she played her part and played it well, plying the man with the coarse raillery of the camp till at length she put him in a good humor, and he opened the gate, bidding her begone and me with her. Already we had passed the gate when a sudden faintness seized me, and I stumbled and fell, rolling over on my back as I touched the earth.



"I am spent. I can do no more."

"Up, friend, up," said Otomie, with a harsh laugh. "If you must sleep, wait till you find some friendly bush," and she dragged at me to lift me. The Tlascalan, still laughing, came forward to help her, and between them I gained my feet again, but as I rose my cap, which fitted me but ill, fell off. He picked it up and gave it to me, and our eyes met, my face being somewhat in the shadow. Next instant I was hobbling on, but looking back I saw the Tlascalan staring after us with a puzzled air, like that of a man who is not sure of the witness of his senses.

"He knows me," I said to Otomie, "and presently, when he has found his wits, he will follow us."

"On, on!" answered Otomie. "Round yonder corner are aloe bushes where we may hide."

"I am spent. I can do no more," and again I began to fall.

Then Otomie caught me as I fell, and of a sudden she put out her strength, and lifting me from the ground as a mother lifts her child staggered forward, holding me to her breast. For 50 paces or more she carried me thus, love and despair giving her strength, till at last we reached the edge of the aloe plants, and there we sank together to the earth. I cast my eyes back over the path which we had traveled. Round the corner came the Tlascalan, a spiked club in his hand, seeking us to solve his doubts.

"It is finished," I gasped. "The man comes."

For answer Otomie drew my sword from its scabbard and hid it in the grass. "Now feign sleep," she said. "It is our last chance."

I cast my arm over my face and pretended to be asleep. Presently I heard the sound of a man passing through the bushes, and the Tlascalan stood over me.

"What would you?" asked Otomie. "Can you not see that he sleeps? Let him sleep."

"I must look on his face first, woman," he answered, dragging aside my arm. "By the gods, I thought so! This is that Teule whom we dealt with yesterday and who escapes."

"You are mad," she said, laughing. "He has escaped from nowhere, save from a brawl and a drinking bout."

"You lie, woman, or if you do not lie you know nothing. This man has the secret of Montezuma's treasure and is worth a king's ransom." And he lifted his club.

"And yet you wish to slay him! Well, I know nothing of him. Take him back whence he came. He is but a drunken sot, and I shall be well rid of him."

"Well said. It would be foolish to kill him, but by bearing him alive to the Lord Sarceda I shall win honor and reward. Come, help me."

"Help yourself," she answered sullenly. "But first search his pouch. There may be some trifle there which we can divide."

"Well said again," he answered, and kneeling down he bent over me and began to fumble at the fastenings of the pouch.

Otomie was behind him. I saw her face change, and a terrible light came into her eyes—such a light as shines in the eyes of the priest at sacrifice. Quick as thought she drew the sword from the grass and smote with all her strength upon the man's bent neck. Down he fell, making no sound, and she also fell beside him. In a moment she was on her feet again, staring at him wildly, the naked sword in her hand.

"Up," she said, "before others come to seek him! Nay, you must!"

Now again we were struggling forward through the bushes, my mind filled with a great wonder that grew slowly to a whirling nothingness. For awhile it seemed to me as though I were lost in an evil dream and walking on redhot irons in my dream. Then came a vision of armed men with lifted spears and of Otomie running toward them with outstretched arms.

I know no more.

One of the Unknown Quantities.

There are many persons who talk very learnedly about electricity and seem to fancy that they have found out all about it that is worth knowing. In the face of ideas of this sort comes on an accident without precedent indeed, one that under ordinary circumstances would be counted impossible. A workman in oiling the machinery of a small electric fan—one used merely for the purpose of cooling the air in a business house—accidentally touched the wire and was instantly killed. The current that runs the fan is said to have scarcely power enough to give a gentle shock when touched. An electrician who has recently been making some important experiments has demonstrated that by using electricity in a certain way 50 times the current usually employed for executing criminals may be passed through the human body without injury. Is it not possible, then, that very weak currents under certain conditions may possess power hitherto unsuspected?—New York Ledger.

THIS IS THE TIME

This is the time for the best endeavors of patriotism. If it shall grasp the great opportunity now presented the Republican party will lift us up to new if not a greater career in the redemption of the land from its ruin and industrial paralysis, from the lack of confidence which is the father of panic, from that commercial frenzy which drives solvency to the wall and from that unsurpassed spirit of demagogy which seeks to array class against class, capital against labor and section against section.—From speech of Gen Hastings at League of Clubs Convention

HOW IS IT?

The well-intentioned citizen who has not yet decided how to vote at the coming election may well consider his position. I hope he will measure of himself how he likes the conditions since the Republican party has gone out of power. How has it been with him individually? Has he had steady employment? Is he paid the old Republican wage rate? Does he find the cost of living cheaper and the ability to meet that cost better? Is his business prosperous? Is he as contented and confident of the future as before? When he has answered to himself these vital questions let him on his way to the polls pass the silent mill, the cold furnace, the broken bank, the deserted forge, let him pass by poverty and want, business paralyzed and confidence banished, and then record his judgment of the responsibility for these conditions and his hope for the future in the ballot which he places in the box.—From speech of Gen Hastings at the League Clubs Convention.

JUDGING from the applause that greeted Hon C. W. Stone at Bradford, the voters of McKean are somewhat proud of their able representative in Congress.

IT is dollars to doughnuts that when the first case of income tax is carried the Supreme Court of the United States it will be pronounced an unconstitutional measure by that august body.

GOV. FLOWER, of New York, has refused to be a candidate for re-election this fall, feeling satisfied that his flour would be dough, as there is not heat enough in the Democratic party in that state to bake it to a turn.

ABOUT once in three weeks something occurs to remind the public that there is a man named Singerly running for Governor of Pennsylvania on the Democratic ticket.—Express The period is longer here, as his name is hardly mentioned.

IN the sugar planter's convention held at New Orleans on Monday last there was a regular stampede to Republican principles and protection. After a few feeble efforts to stem the tide, the convention went over to the national Republican party in a body.

JUDGING from the crowds of enthusiastic Republicans congregated in Bradford on Tuesday evening, it clearly showed that the Republican party had not gone into the hands of a receiver, as was predicted by the Democratic press less than two years ago, and the rounds of applause that greeted our standard bearers must have caused the hearts of the Democrats to sink deep down in their bosoms.

A mass meeting of the rice and sugar planters, of Arcadia Parish, La., has been called to meet Saturday, to express their displeasure at the action of the Democratic party toward rice and sugar. Indignation is displayed by all the large planters and a great upheaval in political ranks may be looked for in that state. Republicanism is coming to the front, even south of Mason and Dixon's line.

EX VICE PRESIDENT LEVI P. Morton was nominated for Governor of New York by the Republican convention held at Saratoga on Tuesday last, by a vote of 532½ for him, 153 scattering against him, and Charles T. Saxton for Lieutenant Governor, and Albert Haight, for Judge of Court of appeals. The convention was harmonious throughout and presages a complete Republican victory in the Empire State this fall.

HASTINGS AT BRADFORD!

THE RAIN DID NOT DAMPEN THE REPUBLICAN ARDOR.

THE TARIFF THE ISSUE.

One of the Largest and Most Enthusiastic Meetings Ever Held in McKean Co.—Gen Hastings Makes a Stirring Speech, in Which He Talks on National Issues. Gen Latta, Charles Warwick and Congressman C. W. Stone also Deliver Strong Addresses.

The rain on Tuesday evening commenced falling at Bradford a short time previous to the arrival of the train from Johnsonburg, which brought General D. H. Hastings and party to the city, but notwithstanding all that throngs of people were at the depot to do honor to the man who will be the next Governor of this great commonwealth. Leaving the depot, the guests in carriages and the vast crowd on foot, the procession marched up Main street, headed by the Emery Band. All along the route fireworks were set off making the street one blaze of colored lights. Arriving at the St. James, the General and his party stepped from their carriages amid great applause. In the corridor an informal reception was held, and many of the citizens of the county paid their respects to Generals Hastings and Latta.

After supper the large delegations marched to the Exchange Lyceum and it was soon filled to overflowing within and the sky was overflowing without. Another meeting was arranged to be held in Orpheus Hall, but owing to the fact that it was not generally understood, many people sought shelter from the storm at their homes and in the hotels, and consequently the latter meeting was not so well attended as the former.

At the Exchange Lyceum the meeting was called to order by Chairman Clark, after which the committee on organization presented their report. Charles L. Wheeler was made president, and a large number of representative men from different parts of the county were selected as vice presidents. The members of the press of the county were made secretaries.

President Wheeler then introduced Gen Hastings, who was received with the wildest enthusiasm. Our space will not permit of a full text of the candidate's speech. Below we give some extracts as follows:

At present a large number of the people of Pennsylvania are anxious to vote, said the general. I don't know a time in our history when the people of all classes were so anxious to vote. A few days ago the people voted in the state of Vermont. Kentucky has voted in a manner that makes every decent man and woman in the country rejoice that the Ashland district has been redeemed from indecency. We have heard something from Maine and the news came down the sea coast like a cold wave. Perhaps this result may have been a tribute to the memory of James G. Blaine, or an expression of loyalty to the great Tom Reed. But the unprecedented vote must surely indicate that everybody is tired of the ruling down at Washington. And Pennsylvania has spoken. In February the Keystone state rolled up a majority of 188,000 for the old Republican veteran, Galusha A. Grow. The thought in this campaign is a serious one. The people are tired of hard times. The interests of the entire country are our interests. Our future is not to be choked to death by legislation in the interest of a country that lies south of us. The question is a more serious one than party politics. It is a question of life and death, involving the future of our country. The question with each person is, how has it been with me individually since the free trade party is in power? If a laboring man, you ask, are wages as good—is my family as well provided for—are they as happy and is future success and happiness assured? These should be decided when the ballot is taken in the hand and the silent forges, and darkened furnaces are passed and the voter must express his impression of the times by the ballot he casts.

We are told these depressions come periodically, that they are the result of some law that cannot be controlled. They also tell us it is the result of the McKinley bill. Can any one tell of any business prostrated because of the McKinley tariff law? or any class of men thrown out of employment because of the McKinley law? Not one. From the time the tariff law passed at the beginning of the war, from Lincoln to Harrison, the progress of this country was never so great at any other time in our history. The last year of Harrison's administration was the most prosperous in our history, and many good men thought a change would be good and voted for it. They got it and now they want another change.

This is a question of business. Whether you are going to take care of yourself or let them lead you to ruin. Every good, patriotic citizen must care for his own household. This is our own country. It don't belong to Great Britain. We must fight our own battles. We must defend our country. The controlling interests of that bill came from the south. Did you ever hear of any labor organization requesting Congress to lower the tariff or reduce duties, or any class of laborers?

How do you feel to come to the price of pauper labor on the other side? Does that make you a better citizen or a better Christian? I tell you the moment wages come down the wage earner shrinks as a man. I don't know whether sugar will come down or not. They have put a tariff on peanuts raised in the south and have put the lumber of the north on the free list. It is a peanut policy.

It is time to think seriously and determine what is for own interest. It is our country. Each one is an integral part and responsible. Let foreign countries provide for themselves. Let us protect our American industries, the American Sabbath, the American fields and farms; they are ours to be guarded and defended by the men of America.

Charles Warwick, of Philadelphia, was the next speaker, and devoted most of his time to Democrats, as he had no time to waste on Republicans. He did not see any use in attempting to save people who were already saved. He said a man must either be a free trader or a Republican, and gave a brief history of the tariff legislation in this country and its results to the prosperity of the people.

Gen Latta was the next speaker and his remarks were well timed and facetious.

Congressman C. W. Stone was the last speaker and his appearance was the signal for hearty applause. Mr Stone declined to make a speech, as the hour was late and special trains were waiting to take the delegations to their homes, but said, after a few remarks on the national situation that he would speak at another time in detail of the Wilson bill and its provisions. He concluded with a glowing tribute to the standard bearers of the Republican party of Pennsylvania.

PEACE and harmony prevails in the Democratic camp in Potter county. Butterworth and Caskey ever since last Fall have been firing away at Seibert the chairman of the Democratic County Committee. They have called one another all the names found in the dictionary, and some new ones have been coined by the worthy trio. But now the sweet angel of peace rests her weary wings and everything is serene. These three Democrats have fallen on one another's neck and made up, while Mr Sullivan the able manager stands by with a beaming smile on his face and says "Bless you my children bless you." How sweet is the communion of such warm friends for warm they have been in the past. But just wait a little while, such a calm generally precedes a storm. There is too much love in the present situation to be lasting under existing circumstances.

WE naturally wonder what were the thoughts of the Democrats who visited Bradford's Lyceum hall, as they sat and listened to the hot shot of Republican arguments poured into their ranks by Mr Warwick and the other speakers. One point in particular was well taken by Mr Warwick when he said that the Democratic orators said in the campaign of 1892 "give us full charge of this government and we will greatly improve your condition, we will make better times all around." In their speeches of '92 they did not predict these hard times as coming on, but that they were going to improve the times, everything was going to wear a roseate hue if the control of the government was handed over into their hands. As soon as they held full sway hard times began to come, then they crawled out of their promises of a millennium by laying the blame upon the McKinley bill instead of putting the blame upon the people's lack of confidence in the Democratic party where it justly belonged. Eating crow is not a very palatable dish but some of the Democratic orators will have to indulge in that diet to a considerable extent.

WE take pleasure in clipping an extract from the Bituminous Record published at Philipsburg this state, Democratic in its politics, devoted to those principles yet in a long editorial article the paper announces that they are for Gen Hastings, because "He is opposed to the pluck me store System of Paying Wages. Favors the Semi-monthly Pay Act. Paid His Employes Twice a Month in Cash. Gave Preference to American Miners—Never recognized the Black list—Opposed the Wholesale Importation of Foreign Pauper Labor." What more could be said in favor of our standard bearer, when Democrats come out in such strong language in favor of our candidate. Voters irrespective of party here is the whole matter in a nut shell. Vote for the man who is the friend of the laboring man.

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Democratic Senator in Illinois, has announced that the Republican party is dead. And not a one of those poor, ignorant Maine or Vermont Republicans knew a word about it.—Buffalo Express. Wonder if we will not hear of some being dead in the same way in Pennsylvania along about next November?

IT HELPS AUSTRIA.

The Philadelphia Record whose editor and owner is the Democratic candidate for governor of Pennsylvania, is the last person to be suspected of discussing any effect of the new tariff law that is not correct. In the issue of The Record of Sept. 10, we find the following in its foreign correspondence:

"In several Austrian trades the new law has been welcomed cordially. The McKinley tariff almost killed the mother of pearl industry in Austria by piling up a tax that amounted to 140 per cent. Under the new rate, which is about 84 per cent., it will be possible to revive the business. The reduction of duties on gloves and Bohemian glassware has been received thankfully by the Austrian manufacturers."

What answer have the free traders and opponents of the McKinley law to make to such an admission as this, in which there is no effort even to counteract the fact that the McKinley law was a benefit to American manufacturers, and that its repeal and the passage of the Gorman tariff bill is regarded by Austrian trades in such light that they welcome it cordially and, to use the words of Mr Singerly's paper, "The reduction of duties on gloves and Bohemian glassware has been received thankfully by the Austrian manufacturers."

The Austrian manufacturers are certainly delighted with the new tariff law, and they certainly would not be delighted if it did not abolish the McKinley law, which shut out their goods and gave those of the American manufacturer a chance.

There is plenty of food for reflection in the paragraph above quoted from Mr. Singerly's paper, and the voters of Pennsylvania who have any doubt about the genuineness of it can find it in the first column of the fifth page of the Philadelphia Record of Monday, Sept. 10.

MALARIA AND MISERY.

A [illegible] Too Often Seen in Malarious Sections.

He was a raw-boned, hard handed farmer, less than fifty years of age, but with a sallow and wizened complexion, peculiar to seventy, just such a mixture of malaria and manhood as the Mississippi valley only can furnish—hardy, horny, homely and honest. He was unhitching from a rickety wagon an old horse so knobby and loose-jointed that the oft-mended harness seemed necessary to hold it together. A two-roomed mud chinked log house, a faded slattern woman, a troop of under-fed, frowsy children, some long-legged chickens, a tamarack swamp stretching away in all directions—these complete the picture, and malaria had done it all. It had changed stalwart manhood, healthy womanhood, to gaunt ghastliness. Thrift became squalor and plenty poverty: weeds and shrubs overran well tilled fields and dismal untidiness had pervaded every nook and cranny of the once well kept premises of 'Squire —— of —— La. While the 'Squire proceeded unhitching the woman, his wife began lifting out of the wagon the few groceries which he had brought from the village, a few miles away. "Where's the bottle of quinine?" "No, I did not exactly forget it, or get it, either. The drug store man showed me a new medicine for malaria which he says is a great deal better than quinine and I'm getting tired of it." "Well," she answered, "we'll try it but I haven't a particle of faith in the new-fangled stuff. I should think they could find a better name for it than Pe-ru-na," she added, spelling out the name on the bottle.

Three years later 'Squire —— was seated on the front veranda of his new house, a pair of prancing steeds and a stylish carriage stand before the door. The 'Squire looks twenty years younger than when we first saw him. No one would recognize the place or inhabitants, a buxom happy wife, strong, healthy children, a well stocked farm waving meadows, where once dreary swamps fostered disease. What has wrought the change? Hear the 'Squire's answer: "Health did it. As soon as I began the use of Pe-ru-na instead of quinine we all began at once to regain our health, our spirits, our ambition, our enterprise, and our strength. All these malaria had taken from us. Pe-ru-na has cleansed our systems of all malarial poison and keeps us from having another attack. This is the whole story. Pe-ru-na did it. It has also done the same thing for our neighbors. Malaria brings disaster and destruction. Pe-ru-na brings health and success. But, by the way, speaking of Pe-ru-na and malaria every one should have a copy of an illustrated book on malaria published by The Peruna Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio. They send it free to any one. I haven't got the words to tell you what this book does about Pe-ru-na and malaria.

THE WAR ON PROTECTION

There seems to be no mistaking the position of the Democrats. They are not satisfied to stop the work of destruction to the interests of the country even at this point after all of the harm that has been wrought by the agitation and the passage of the senate tariff bill. President Cleveland has said that the party has only started on its work of destruction and all of his office holding followers echo that sentiment.

The latest echo comes from the Pennsylvania Democrats who met in convention at Harrisburg last week to fill the two places on the state ticket made vacant by the death of one candidate for congressman at large and the declination of the other. The policy of continued opposition to the best interests of our own country and our own people was as heartily advocated by the Pennsylvania Democratic convention held last week as President Cleveland could hope for. The Pennsylvania Democratic office holders want more demoralization, more panic, more poverty and no return to prosperity that will give the idle thousands work at the wages they were able to secure before the party of paralyzing and poverty producing prosperity came into power. What particular difference does it make to the office holders? There has been no effort to reduce their salaries and so long as there is not they are willing to vote for any kind of a platform presented by the office brokers who rule the Democratic party in Pennsylvania at present.

But the office holders and the few other free traders who remain in Pennsylvania certainly reckon wrong if they think they are going to lead any respectable number of Pennsylvanians this year into support of this policy of favoring more of the depression the country has experienced since the result of the election of 1892 was made known.

The office [illegible] and those who are hanging on [illegible] expectation that offices will come their way may support such a policy but there is too much confidence in the intelligence of the farmer, the mill hand and the shopkeeper all of whom have felt the evil effects of a threat and a taste of free trade to support by their votes any further effort to give Pennsylvania a reputation of favoring more of it.

With the platform of the latest Pennsylvania Democratic convention fairly presented it ought to be safe, with hard work on the part of the workers in the cause of protection to American industries, to predict the right kind of a majority for the Republican candidates at the November election. And certainly every lover of prosperity ought to feel interested in helping to have Pennsylvania send out such a rebuke to free trade as her well considered verdict at this opportune time.

GENERAL HASTINGS will set a good example to other workers in the cause of protection by the extended tour he proposes making before the close of the campaign. It is no small task the general has before him in a speech making tour through almost every county in the state, and every Republican ought to follow his example and instead of waiting for the successful result that is sure to come in November turn in and help to make the victory one that will give Pennsylvania the lead as the upholder of the good cause of protection to American industries, from which results peace and plenty. As Pennsylvania expects to lead the states in the matter of recording opposition to the free trade policy of the present administration, so should every county in the state make an effort to attain the distinction of showing the greatest gain in Republican votes. It never was so much of an honor to stand up well for the cause of protection and in opposition to free trade as it will be this year.

ONE of the tricks already being resorted to in portions of the state to get votes away from the Republican party is the organization of Populist parties in different counties. As a rule the leaders in such organizations are Democrats, who will vote the Democratic ticket on election day, but will profess throughout the campaign devotion to the Populistic party, in the hope thereby that a few Republicans, here and there, will be attracted away from their party far enough to waste their votes on the candidates of the Populists. This trick has already been worked in parts of the state, and will doubtless be resorted to generally before the end of the campaign. Republicans should not be fooled by it into lending any aid in this way to the Democratic cause. Every Republican vote cast for the candidates of the Populists is a vote against the policy of protection and a vote for free trade.

THE Democrats are not to be blamed for wanting to avoid the only issue there is in this campaign, but the people won't have it. They will vote on the issue.

WORK MUST ACCOMPANY CONFIDENCE

The campaign of 1894 in Pennsylvania may now be said to be fairly opened. The magnificent turnout of the young men of the Republican party at the League of clubs' convention held at Harrisburg last week and the great [illegible] interest in the [illegible] address of General Hastings [illegible] lively campaign [illegible] the state. No one doubts the result. In fact no one pretends that [illegible] and it is generally conceded that General Hastings and his associates on the Republican ticket will be elected by a majority that will indicate the feelings of the people, not only toward the candidates but will particularly emphasize the Pennsylvania opposition to the policy and party of free trade, and indicate anew the loyalty of her sons, to the party and the leaders of the protective policy under which prosperity and happiness, peace and plenty ruled in the homes that have known so much want and misery during the short period of accidental free trade rule in every branch of the national government.

But more than a substantial victory at the coming election ought to be desired by every opponent of the policy of free trade, [illegible] of which proved so disastrous to every branch of trade and caused so much poverty throughout the state and country, and it should be the willing task of every Republican and every man of the thousands in Pennsylvania who have recently become converts to the wise policy of the party of protection to work from this time until the polls are closed on election day to roll up such a majority for the Republican candidates this year as will fittingly indicate the measure of contempt in which the intelligence of Pennsylvania holds the party and the policy that has in such a short lease of power destroyed so much that was prosperous and brought so much misery into so many homes that were before its coming happy and contented.

It is not unnatural that, in view of the lesson the people have learned the expectation should be quite general that no work is necessary to induce the great majority to go to the polls this fall and rebuke the policy and the party of free trade. And this may be true. It is hard to understand how after the experience of the past sixteen months any respectable number of intelligent people living in such a state as Pennsylvania can vote otherwise at this time than in opposition to the Democratic party and its candidates.

But whether they will or not it is none the less the duty and should be the pleasure of every lover of prosperity and the policy of protection under which Pennsylvania and Pennsylvanians knew so much of it, to devote as much of his time as he can spare from now until election day in working to insure a result that will place Pennsylvania in the lead of the states that have so much cause for a substantial and [illegible] understood renewal of devotion to the policy of protection to American industries and opposition to the [illegible] policy of free trade that has been on trial and which is [illegible] they have suffered since the party that stands for it came into power.

It should be [illegible] therefore at the outset of this campaign that more than the natural [illegible] of victory that is everywhere within the Republican ranks is needed. The few remaining leaders of the party of free trade in Pennsylvania will not be idle in this campaign. They do not expect to elect their candidates, it is true, but they do hope to reduce the Republican majority given Congressman Grow last February and claim that as a substantial gain in Pennsylvania for free trade. And if successful it cannot be doubted they will use it in future contests in which they may engage.

The Republican majority of 187,806 given Galusha A. Grow last February can be repeated next November. The reasons for such a majority are stronger now than they were then but it should be borne in mind that the opposition will fight more vigorously now than then and if the substantial success so much to be hoped for is to be realized and the majority for General Hastings is to exceed 200,000 as it should every Republican will have to do his full duty and starting in the performance of it now keep up the work until the polls close on election day. The best way to do it is to work in the direction of polling the vote of all who oppose the free trade policy.

Congressman Pigott of Connecticut has taken the trouble to investigate the result if success had attended all of the Populist efforts made in the last congress and the result ought to convince those who are anxious that the country should travel on a safe road but who are not yet determined to have no more of the Democratic party or the Populists, that this would be a good year to add their votes to those of the great army of intelligent Pennsylvanians who purpose rebuking free trade and Populism at the polls this year. The investigation made by Mr Pigott shows that figures have no terrors for the Populists.

It would take $10,000,000,000 to make effective Representative Bacon's bill to loan money to mortgage debtors, $12,000,000,000 to loan money to states under Mr Clover's bill, $500,000,000 to pay for internal improvements under Mr Bacon's bill, and so on down to Senator Peffer's rainwater bill, which only contemplates an expenditure of $[illegible]. According to Mr Pigott if the Populist bills should be passed by congress it would require appropriations aggregating not less than $35,000,000,000 to say nothing of the $15,000,000,000 additional that would be necessary if the government should attempt to acquire control of the railroads, as proposed by Senator Peffer's resolution.

In a good cause there should be no laggards. Protection is a good cause.

Notice in Divorce.

A. D. No. 100, December Term [illegible]

McKEAN COUNTY, ss.—THE COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania, to the said county, greeting.

Whereas, Annie Berg by her next friend A. W. Peterson, did, on the 5th day of [illegible] 189[illegible], prefer her petition to our said Court of Common Pleas of said county praying for the causes therein set forth that she might be divorced from the bonds of matrimony entered into with you Charles Berg.

We therefore command you the said Charles Berg, that setting aside all other business and excuses whatsoever, you be and appear in your proper person before our Judges at Smethport, at a Court of Common Pleas there to be held for the County of McKean, on the [illegible] day of October next, to answer the petition or libel of said Annie Berg and to show cause, if any you have, why the said Annie Berg, your wife, should not be divorced from the bonds of matrimony, agreeably to the Acts of Assembly in such case made and provided. Herein fail not.

The men of our town are cordially invited to attend at St. Luke's church on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. This special service and sermon will be for men only.

[illegible] Fox, of the St. James at Bradford has the art of a caterer down fine. The banquet he furnished General Hastings and friends Tuesday night was simply grand.

The piano that has caused such a stir in Bradford is on exhibition in the windows of Dolan's music store. A card has been placed on it which reads: "Played on with an axe."

Some of our townspeople who went to the show at Bradford are kicking themselves for not attending the political meeting, as the theatrical performance did not come up to their expectation.

William Adler was very seriously injured in the mill at Crosby, on Monday morning, by being struck over the eye by a piece, cutting a large gash and skinning his face badly. Dr. McCoy dressed the wounds.

There will be a Farmers' Alliance dance at East Smethport, in the Farmers' Alliance hall, the 21st of September, 1894. Good music and the best of order will be had.

By Order of Committee.

On Monday R. Sartwell showed us a basket of potatoes raised on his land east of the borough. The tubers were of enormous size weighing from one and a half to two pounds. Mr. Sartwell tells us they grow until the frost kills the tops.

The steamship Lucania, of the Cunard line of steamers, is the Queen of the seas as far as speed is concerned. She has crossed the ocean both ways in the space of five days, eight hours and thirty-eight minutes. The fastest record ever made.

—Look out for attractions at Sprague building on the evenings of September 28th and 29th. There will be a fair held there under the direction of the Ladies Aid Society and Epworth League. Refreshments will be served each evening.

[illegible] Fagnan, became quite enthusiastic as Gen. Hastings, and his friends [illegible] up Main street Bradford, on Tuesday night. Although it was raining hard he was out in the street burning red fire, seemingly as happy as a young boy at a Fourth of July celebration.

Frank Davidson, as "Farmer Hopkins" appeared at the Opera House [illegible] night last, and as usual, favored [illegible] audience with an excellent entertainment. Mr. Davidson is a favorite wherever he goes, and is sure of a warm reception. Come again, Farmer. You are always welcome.

A mahogany log measuring 44 feet, [illegible] inches in length, by 60 inches one way, and [illegible] inches the other, and weighing over [illegible] tons, was recently landed at Greenpoint, N. Y. This is considered the largest piece of mahogany ever brought to the United States. It was brought from Guatemala.

Judge Morrison and wife returned from Pittsburg on Saturday. The W. R. C. elected Mrs. Morrison vice president of the national corps. It is a very good selection as the estimable lady devotes a good portion of her time to the noble work performed by that honorable society. May they continue in their good work for they have a worthy object.

—John Brineman is the first to suffer by the iniquitous income tacks. It was served on him Wednesday night much to the enjoyment of a number of his numerous friends.

—The recent drouth has affected many of our neighboring town's water works. That's natural. There wasn't water enough in Coudersport for a decent "chaser."—Enterprise. What the dickens do you need a chaser for in that prohibition town.

—J. G. King returned from Smethport this morning, where he has placed his three-year-old colt for winter keeping in the hands of that expert horseman, W. H. Pickard, who will give him a thorough training while he has him in charge.—Kane Republican.

—The aged father of Senator A. F. Bannon and W. H. Bannon, of this city, died at Blossburg Monday. W. H. Bannon has gone to Blossburg, but the Senator, on account of his illness is not able to be in attendance at the funeral. Deceased was 81 years old.—Star.

—An exchange says that the eccentric Governor Waite, of Colorado, "blood-to-bridles Waite," as he is familiarly called is one of the three surviving members of Warren Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Warren, Pa., which was instituted forty-five years ago. That's rough on Pennsylvania.

—Linseed oil is a sure remedy for both hard and soft corns. If they are inflamed and very painful the relief it gives in a short time is most grateful. Bind on a soft rag saturated with linseed oil, and continue to dampen it with the oil every night and morning until the corn can be removed easily and without pain.

—Don't starve out your merchants and mechanics by allowing transients to carry your money out of town. Do your trading at home and give your mechanics the first chance of employment. Show us the community that adheres strictly to the rule of home first and we will show you a prosperous village every time.—Ex.

—A young lady, attending school not far from here, studies Latin. She has a beau. That beau asked her the other evening what was the meaning of "sic transit gloria mundi." She translated it like this: "Come and see me Monday." He's going and he will have a good time, as the old folks are away on a visiting tour.

—The Oaks, of Smethport, trimmed up the Bradford base ball club of that city to the Queen's taste last Saturday to the tune of six to eighteen. Our boys speak in the highest terms of their entertainment and it must have been fine as they came back in installments. Some of them did not get home until 9:30 Saturday night.

—The sheriff of Potter county went to Keating Summit one day this week, to serve some subpœnas presumably for witnesses in whiskey suits, as they sometimes have such cases in Potter. When the officer stepped from the car every male head in sight disappeared as if by magic, and were not visible again until the sheriff departed. There must have been some use for chasers in that section lately.

—Mrs. W. J. Colegrove and Mrs. Brandt were driving on upper King street on Tuesday afternoon, and in turning down into Main, the buggy partially turned over, throwing both ladies out, Mrs. Brandt escaping without any injury. Mrs. Colegrove was somewhat bruised, but not seriously hurt. They were very fortunate in their escape. The horse jerked loose from the buggy and ran some distance before he was caught.

—The Galeton Hazlet's stories about the buckwheat that is six feet tall would not be so bad if that paper did not give the names of the parties who raised it. W. W. Madison and Dan Helser we have known for a number of years, and their equals for telling wonderful yarns is not to be found in the northern tier. Tom, as you get better acquainted with the disciples of Cervantes, you will put less credence in what they tell you. Ananias was not in it with them.

—A gentleman residing in the Foster Brook valley received a letter the other day from a friend in an Illinois town that has always been a Democratic stronghold. The effect of Democratic times and Democratic legislation in that town may be inferred from a passage in the letter referred to. The writer says: "I have a very valuable mule which for weeks I have been trying to trade for a Democratic vote; but there is not a single Democratic vote in the town."—Star.

—The Rev. E. E. Helms preached to a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night. His text, "Christ All in All," was very ably handled. Some ministers wonder why their audiences are so small. Let them get as thoroughly warmed up and interested in their subjects as Mr Helms was Sunday night, and crowds will flock to hear them. Mr. Helms has struck the right chord. "Christ" is his only text, and the way he talks about the wonderful Saviour leaves no doubt in the mind of his hearers as to Christ's sufficiency.

—Prof. Fell holds the belt as the most successful squirrel hunter in this section. On Saturday last he went out hunting, having ten loaded shells. He returned at night with nine fine squirrels, and one loaded shell—a very good day's work. Of course the Prof. had an advantage over the rest of the hunters, as all he had to do was to hold up the rod of correction and the squirrels would immediately assume an upright position on their haunches, hold up their little forepaws and thus become an easy prey to the Prof.'s unerring aim.

—Last week quite a number of our young people drove to Duke Center to take in the Kickapoo show. After the entertainment they adjourned to the hotel to take in some more entertainment. When the time came for starting home, a lunch was provided by the landlord to eat on the way home, who sized the crowd up and put in about three pounds of Limberger cheese. The party did not relish the cheese very well, but Ezra Taylor said if he had the skunk that he had been hunting for recently to season the cheese with, he thought it would become quite palatable. There is no accounting for taste.

—The entertainment given by the Smethport Bicycle Club on Monday night was a decided success in every way. The hall was beautifully decorated with evergreens, while over the front of the stage was a very good imitation of a lady riding a wheel. She was dressed in a dark blue bloomer suit, with bicycle hat and gloves, very artistically gotten up, attracting a great deal of attention. Miss Cora Mason and Mrs. Pierce are artists in that line. The managers of the affair spared no pains to entertain their guests. The ice cream and other refreshments were very fine, and the music furnished by Rosco's celebrated orchestra needs no comment on our part; it was simply grand. We have failed to find anyone who was not perfectly satisfied with the entertainment, and would be pleased to attend another.

—In course of transit between New York and New Orleans a packet of paper money had been opened and its contents considerably reduced. Two of the seals had been broken and one had been resealed by thumb pressure. Mr. Carvalho, an expert in matters of identification, endeavored to find out the thief, and with this view obtained wax impressions of the thumbs of all the officials of the American Express Company through whose hands the packet was known to have passed. The impressions were photographed and enlarged, and one of them clearly agreed with an enlarged photograph of the thumb-impressed seal. The thief was thus detected.—Scientific American.

—The American Co-Operative Union was formally organized in Smethport on Saturday afternoon last. The following officers were elected: President C. W. Harrington, of Hazelhurst; Secretary, W. P. Rhinehart; Treasurer, Willard Hess; Directors, George Harrington, S. D Karr, E. M. Cheesman, W. J. Brown, P. D. Henderson, Hazelhurst; J. S. Fogle, Port Allegany; E. D. Tupper, Eldred; Prof. W. C. Damon, Harriman, Tenn. This organization is formed to start a co-operative town, and will only take into its membership such men as are of a good moral character, and when the town is started, it will exclude from its membership any one who engages in the sale of liquor and also prohibits the opening of billiard or pool rooms within its limits. The gentlemen who are at the head of the society are men well known for their high moral standing. As soon as their printing is completed they will go to work and use their best efforts to make the society a strong and vigorous helper for the betterment of the laboring classes. The MINER wishes the new organization success.

Maccabee State Convention.

The annual convention was held at Warren the first of the week. About 5,000 members of the order were present, and the town was profusely decorated in honor of the guests. Rain prevented the parade which was to have taken place on Tuesday evening.

About 5 o'clock the vote on the question of a great camp was taken, resulting in a unanimous vote for its adoption, and on Wednesday morning the convention elected the following officers: Past Great Commander, C. L. Coville, Corry; Great Commander, E. S. Watson, Williamsport; Great Lieutenant Commander, G. A. Riddell, Erie; Great Record Keeper, W. E. Blaney, Oil City; Great Finance Keeper, M. G. Raub, Bradford.

At the convention of the L. O. T. M., Mrs. E. E. Brown, of Rixford, and Mrs. M. Louise Cogswell, of Warren, were elected delegates to the Supreme Convention, to be held at Port Huron next May. There are 60 hives in this state, with a membership of over 2,000.

A Dangerous Counterfeit.

Chief Hazen of the secret service gives notice of a very dangerous new counterfeit $20 United States silver certificate. It is of the series of 1891, check letter "C," plate number 5, J. Fount Tillman, register; D. N. Morgan, treasurer; portrait of Daniel Manning; small scalloped carmine seal. The note is well executed and is printed from an etched plate. In the portrait of Daniel Manning the mustache does not curl at the ends, as in the genuine, but runs out to stubbed ends. There is a white line outlining the entire left side of the face and neck. The treasury numbers are out of alignment, but their color is good; the parallel ruled lines in the panels containing the numbers are broken, leaving white spots. The color of green ink, used on the back, is too light, giving it a dull appearance.

We are not troubled with any bills of this denomination, but some of our subscribers may have some of the evil, consequently we print a description of the counterfeit in order to place them on their guard.

Morning Wedding.

On Monday morning, Sept. 17, at 8 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents in Eldred, there occured a quiet wedding the interested parties being Mr. J. G. Campbell, the genial photographer of Eldred, and Miss Minnie Crook, oldest daughter of C. W. Crook. There were present only the immediate relatives with a few intimate friends. The ceremony was performed by the Rev F. W. Berlin. The presents were numerous and appropriate. After a sumptuous wedding breakfast the happy couple started east on the morning train for a week in New York.

Good Dog.

Mrs. Jennie P. Lane, of Smethport, Pa., has a big Newfoundland dog which is a first-class substitute for a nurse. It takes the baby riding in the carriage every day. The dog holds the handle with its teeth and wheels the coach as carefully as the infant's mother could.—Kane Republican.

A person has to go away from home to get the news. There is no such woman here, neither is there such a dog.

A Correction.

We have received the following correction in regard to the announcement of the dance held at East Smethport last week. We print it verbatim:

E Smethport
Farmer Allaince
September 18, 1894.

Editor Dear Sir—

I see in your last isue a count of a farmer Alliance dance I wish to in form your readers that the farmer Alliance has had no dance but has rented the hall to parties of dance purpise.

Sacramental Service.

The fourth quarterly meeting of Smethport Methodist church for the present conference year, will be held next Sunday. Lovefeast at 9:45. Preaching at 10:30. The sacrament of the Lord's supper will be administered at the close of the morning sermon. All are invited.

Peculiar to Itself.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiar to itself in a strictly medicinal sense, in three important particulars, viz: first in the combination of remedial agents used; second in the proportion in which they are mixed; third, in the process by which the active curative properties of the of the preparation are secured. These three important points make Hood's Sarsaparilla peculiar in its medicinal merit, as it accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

But it not what we say but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story. What Hoods Sarsaparilla has done for others is reason for confidence it is the medicine for you.

The undersigned wish to call the attention of the ladies of Smethport and vicinity, that said party having secured rooms in the Reilly block, will be in readiness to do all kinds of dress making in first class order. Call and investigate. All orders promptly attended to. Patronage solicited.

MRS. A. M. FRENCH.

W. F. SPECHT issues all kinds of Insurance policies, call on him when in want of any insurance.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, and do not purge pain or gripe. Sold by all druggists.

SOCIETY AND PERSONAL NOTES.

We would deem it a favor if those having friends visiting in this place would notify us by postal or by leaving a notice at this office.

Tom Morrison left for Buffalo on Tuesday, to complete his course in a preparatory school in that city. If Tom is half as successful in his studies as he was in holding down first base for the Oaks this season, he will graduate with honors.

On Tuesday we received a pleasant call from C. B. Roberts and son, R. R. Roberts, of Ceres. The young man is agent for the Universal Savings and Loan Co., of Geneva, N. Y. Mr. Roberts will locate in Smethport for some time in order to establish a branch agency here. We take pleasure in introducing him to the people of Smethport. He is a young man of pleasing address and will be sure to make his mark in the world.

August Oil Operation.

In its review of oil operations, the Bradford Era says:

There were 339 wells completed in the fields yielding crude for illuminating purposes and the total new production was estimated at 7,706 bbls; the dry holes numbered 79. Compared with July there is an increase of 5 wells completed and a decrease of 1,042 bbls. production, accompanied by an increase of 9 dry holes. On August 31st the count showed 290 rigs, and 183 drilling wells, an increase of 41 rigs, and an increase of 24 drilling wells, as compared with the July report.

In the local fields nothing out of the ordinary was developed. The territory northeast of Ormsby Junction still supplies inviting ground prospectors, but it appears more likely to be remarkable for gas production than oil. At Glen Hazel the work to the north and westward of the earlier developments seems to afford more promising results. The Allegany field contains more active operations than in some time past, and there is a general revival of activity along the borders of the Bradford oil basin.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at F. R. Foster's and A. B. Armstrong & Co's drug stores.

A New Railroad Route.

The Buffalo & Susquehanna R. R. will soon be completed to Ansonia, on the Fall Brook system, and when finished will be one of the most popular routes of travel in the State, as it will open a direct eastern outlet to all in this section. Besides these advantages, the scenery is perfectly grand. Starting at Keating Summit, thence over the divide into the waters of Freeman Run, nine miles away we strike the beautiful and thriving town of Austin, with its immense mills and other industries, and a more hospitable class of people is not to be found anywhere. Three miles below is the busy little town of Costello, where is located one of the largest tanneries in the State at the confluence of Freeman Run and the beautiful Sinnemahoning. This is a busy little village, teeming with thrift and industry. In all the labor troubles there has never, to our knowledge, been any strike at this tannery. Thence down the valley of the Sinnemahoning, with fine farms and lovely scenery, to the mouth of the East Fork of the Sinnemahoning. Following up its winding course we come to the thriving town of Hulls, where less than two years ago three houses constituted the whole town; now it is a hustling town, where traffic is carried on extensively. From here we enter a dense forest and commence climbing the summit that divides the Sinnemahoning waters and those of Pine Creek. Winding around the mountain side the scenery is grand and ever changing. In climbing the mountain, several switchbacks become necessary and as you keep going up first one way and then the other, like a shuttle in a weaver's loom, and when arrived at the upper one, several railroad tracks can be seen below.

When arrived at the summit, the route lies along the divide for quite a distance; thence dropping over on the Cross Forks side, the road follows along under the side hill, twisting its tortuous course along until the celebrated hog back is reached that is well known to every lover of sport, either hunter or fisherman, that has ever visited these parts. This is a notch in a mountain that is over two hundred feet lower than the summits surrounding it, and only wide enough for a wagon track. Its peculiar formation attracts the eye of every traveler. Through this the railroad runs, with a cut thirty feet deep, and when the bridge for the wagon road is completed, it will add a very unique appearance to the scene.

From here we strike the West Branch waters of Pine Creek, and sitting on the engine as you pass through the gap, the sensation comes over a person that he is riding out into space, with the valley below running almost at right angles to the course you are pursuing—it becomes very startling. Then you take a winding and tortuous course around mountain peaks and up deep ravines until you get down to the waters of the West Branch, when, almost like a flash, you leave the dense forests and come suddenly upon a scene of thrift and comfort; little farms dotting the valley here and there, with high mountains on each side for a beautiful background. It is a scene that will be forcibly impressed upon the tourist and will remain as long as life lasts.

Going along down the stream for a distance of about seven miles, you come to the great town of Galeton, at the confluence of Pine Creek and the West Branch. Here is another good tannery, established about 12 years ago by W. & L. R. Gale, but now owned by the Penn Tanning Company. This town is full of business, thrift and enterprise, and will become one of the leading towns of that section. The Railroad shops will be built here, and with the other business interests that will follow it is bound to become the metropolis of Potter county. Five miles below is Gaines, a town that will soon come into prominence, as here the great Goodyear mills will be built. These mills will be on a larger scale than anything ever known of in this section.

Eight miles below we come to Ansonia, on the Fall Brook system and from there you can go north toward Corning and Elmira, or if your eyes have not become surfeited by the grandeur you have just passed through, you can take the route south and enter the wildest looking canon to be found in the state, where the almost perpendicular mountain comes down to the water's edge. The skill of the 19th century was equal to the emergency and the iron horse is now able to travel where it seemed almost impossible to construct a bridle path. Sitting in the coaches, you are unable to see any of the grandeur surrounding you; but take a position on the rear platform, and you will be amply rewarded for your pains. The rugged mountains on either side towering heavenward, and so close together that in order to see the sky it becomes necessary to tip your head back to get a view of the wonderful gorge. It fairly makes a person shiver to observe it, and a sigh of relief will escape from the observer as he emerges from the canon at Blackwells and glides down the valley of Pine creek. To you who are fond of travel and have the time to spare, it will well repay you to take a trip over th's wonderful mountain route, just opened for travel.

J. H. McQUAID.
Farmers Valley, Pa., Sept. 17th 1894.

The success which Hood's Sarsaparilla has had in freeing old and young from affliction caused by impure blood, is really remarkable. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a building-up medicine.

Here is Another.

We give below a yarn that has laid dormant in the fertile brain of Tom Harrington for over a year:

Several of the Gazette's exchanges told us in a kindly manner last week to "let up on curiosities," but as many curiosities are matters, purely, of local news, we must print them for this paper's fast growing circulation. Now, right over there in their own county, 50 miles nearer to the Smethport papers than to the Gazette, on the Emporium end of the Potato Creek road has lived since her birth 13 years ago, a healthy, intelligent female child, with two normal sized and shaped heads.

It seems strange that the newspapers over that way do not tell their readers something of this girl. The girl is of slight but symmetrical form, her faces as beautiful as her pretty, dimpled hands. For five years past she has been taught by a private tutor, and her education is far in advance of any girl of her age in that part of the county. Her features in duplicate, are as perfect likenesses of each other as ever grew from nature's mould. Her eyes are a dark, grayish hue, changing sometimes to Spanish blackness, and they are four as pretty eyes as ever laughed in a face (faces) of love. Her complexions are fair and soft and fresh as new plucked peaches. Her long lashes and well, but delicately marked eyebrows are dark—her foreheads broad and white as snow. She is possessed of a double wealth of silky hair, the color of which is of that rare indescribable Irish cast, blue-black. Her teeth are perfect, aside from a slight defect in a lower front tooth, caused by an accident when she was but six years old. In fact—though people will call her a freak of nature—she is as perfect a specimen of female loveliness as is growing up in the old Keystone State to-day. It would be little trouble to write columns about this beautiful child, but she should be so well known in Cameron and McKean counties, that we leave farther description of her to (if they see fit) the papers of that section.

But the most remarkable thing of all, that we almost forgot to mention, is this girl's voice—or, rather, her voices. She is a born musician and vocalist. Without the aid of an instructor she played delightfully on the guitar at the age of seven, and the piano's sweetest notes surrendered to her fairy touch as if by magic. Her voices are a soprano of remarkable beauty and depth, and an alto of great power and pathos. No two voices we have ever heard fell on our ear as cordantly, as sweetly and as correctly as the voices of this young girl in the simple ballad she sang for us when we visited her home nearly a year ago. It is needless to say that her parents Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, of North Creek, have been offered fortunes to let their daughter travel in the theatrical profession, but thus far, they have steadfastly refused.

Ideal and Real.

"I love all that is beautiful in art and nature," she was saying to her æsthetic admirer. "I revel in the green fields, the babbling brooks and the little wayside flowers. I feast on the beauties of earth and sky and air. They are my daily life and food and"——

"Maudie!" cried out the mother from the kitchen, not knowing that her daughter's beau was in the parlor. "Maudie, whatever made you go and eat that big dish of potatoes that was left over from dinner? I told you we wanted them warmed up for supper. I declare if your appetite isn't enough to bankrupt your pa."—London Tit-Bits.

ACTS ONE AND TWO.

THE THEATRICAL PROFESSION NOW STUDIES THE TARIFF.

Anxiously Wonder About the Closing Scene of Act Three—Protection Means Good Houses—"Tariff Reform" Closes the Doors. Idle Actors Interested.

Attention has already been brought to the condition of the theatrical profession in the United States this year as compared with 1892 and 1893 showing the large number of unemployed actors who have been the recipients of charity from a fund especially collected for that purpose. In order to investigate this condition more fully, a number of the leading theaters in different states in the country have been asked to furnish a comparative statement of their receipts during the first three months of 1893 and 1894. Taking 100 to represent their receipts from January to March 1893 the figures in the second and third columns represent the receipts during the corresponding three months of the two years as follows

ACT ONE 1893

ACT TWO 1894

States	Number of theaters	Receipts Jan to March 1893	1894	Loss 1894
Alabama	2	200	144	[illegible]
Georgia	3	300	200	11
Illinois	6	600	[illegible]	[illegible]
Indiana	2	200	141	[illegible]
Iowa	1	[illegible]	81	[illegible]
Kansas	2	200	140	[illegible]
Kentucky	1	100	90	1
Maryland	1	100	93	[illegible]
Massachusetts	3	300	[illegible]	[illegible]
Michigan	2	200	179	21
Minnesota	1	100	60	4
Mississippi	1	100	100
New Hampshire	2	200	141	[illegible]
New Jersey	1	100	[illegible]	[illegible]
New York	1	300	[illegible]	[illegible]
Ohio	3	300	109	91
Pennsylvania	5	500	414	[illegible]
Tennessee		[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Texas	1	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
West Virginia	1	100	53	[illegible]
Washington	1	100	60	[illegible]
Wisconsin	2	200	135	[illegible]
Totals	47	4,100	3,[illegible]	1,2[illegible]

Average loss, 27 per cent.

The foregoing shows reports from 47 of the leading theaters of the United States. For every $4,100 received by these theaters during the first three months of 1893 their receipts amounted to only $3,[illegible] during the first three months of the present year, the loss being $1,[illegible] or 27 per cent for the whole country. While the actor is not directly protected by a tariff it is very evident that the prosperity of the country under a protective tariff affords larger receipts to those engaged in the theatrical profession than the disturbed condition of the country will permit under the mere threat of free trade. When people are not earning money at all or are not earning good wages, it is impossible for them to spend money upon amusements. Protect [illegible] American industries [illegible] prosperity to the theatrical business.

HOW BUSINESS DEPRECIATED

A Showing of Democratic Maladministration That Beats All Records.

The total bank clearings of the country from April 1, 1893, to March 31, 1894 showed a loss in the volume of trade in the United States as reported at 60 different cities amounting to more than $1[illegible],700,000,000 in money. Investigating this same interesting subject during the second year of the present administration we find that from April 1 to June 30 the bank clearings at the same 57 different cities have been even less than they were during the same three months of 1893. And comparing these three months of the present and two preceding years we have the following

BANK CLEARINGS AT FIFTY FIVE CITIES.

	1894	1893	1892
April	$3,[illegible]	$4,[illegible]	$4,[illegible]
May	[illegible]	4,[illegible]	[illegible]
June	[illegible]	4,[illegible]	4,[illegible]
	$11,[illegible]	$11,[illegible]	$13,[illegible]

Here it is seen that where the first three months of a Democratic administration in 1893 resulted in a comparatively trifling loss of some $330,000,000 to trade in the United States as compared with the business during the same months of 1892 a year later we find that the aggregate shrinkage of business for the corresponding period in 1894 has exceeded $3,500,000,000 as compared with 1893 while this year's business as compared with that of the prosperous year of 1892 shows the enormous decrease of almost $4,000,000,000.

The clearing house reports to Bradstreet's during the first six months of the present year show a shrinkage of over $9,000,000,000 as compared with the first six months of 1893, a loss of 29 per cent in the country's business. This is an economic record of Democratic maladministration through the fear of tariff tinkering that cannot be extinguished.

Free Raw Material Theory

Free traders pretend to want raw materials. They do when the material is of northern production, but not when it comes from the south. We have had free cotton, free hides and free silk. What the result has been the following figures will show

Free raw materials.	Importation of manufactured goods. 1893.	Exportation of manufactured goods. 1890.
Cotton	$22,[illegible]	$11,1[illegible]
Hides	12,[illegible]	13,[illegible]
Silk	41,[illegible]	[illegible]

Instead of capturing the markets of the world, we have imported far more of the manufactured article than we have exported. Thus another free trade bubble is exploded.

Free Traders Disagree.

The following shows how well free traders agree. Both speeches were made on the same day

Extract from speech of Senator Mills in 1890.	Extract from speech of Senator (now Secretary) Carlisle in 1890.
Our tariff is closing the foreign markets against us. We must have access to the people who want our farm products. Sixty-six millions of consumers is a good market, but [illegible] is ten times bigger.	The trade between these states is larger by thousands of millions of dollars than could ever exist between this and all the other countries of the world, if we had absolute free trade.

THE GRAPEVINE SWING.

Blithely whistling, with agile swing,
Leaps the farmer's boy to the grapevine swing.

To and fro, high and low,
Up where the winds the branches blow,
Flying down to lightly pass
Where bare feet ripple the blue eyed grass.
Up again in the sunshine free
Back, in the shade of the maple tree
Spurning the ground with supple foot
At the well worn spot at the maple's root,
Higher the branches strike his breast
There are three blue eggs in the robin's nest!
Dropping, dropping swiftly down
With a flying glimpse of the distant town
Back and forth in the [illegible] glow
Swinging slower and still more slow
[illegible]
[illegible] the vine's perfume
Spreading at length where the grasses yield
He [illegible] the [illegible] field

ACID FOR MAKING SUGAR

A Curious Process Which Has Met With Some Success in France

A very novel method of making sugar has been patented in France by M Pellegrini Sugar is chemically a compound of carbon oxygen and hydrogen in such proportions that if carbonic acid, water and certain kinds of illuminating gas could be persuaded to unite in the proper quantities the composition of sugar would be exactly imitated. Hitherto no one has been able to make sugar by mixing water with two kinds of gas, but M Pellegrini claims to have succeeded. The apparatus he uses consists of a large block of pumice stone, cleansed by soaking first in sulphuric acid and then in water which is set in an iron box plated with nickel inside. The length of the box is three times that of the pumice stone block which is tightly fixed in the middle and pipes are arranged to convey the ingredients to the empty ends of the box as required. Two of them enter from the sides and serve to bring carbonic acid and hydrocarbon gas, while another pipe from above branches so as to reach both empty portions of the box and conveys steam. All the pipes are fitted with valves and pressure gauges.

Another pipe at the bottom of the box serves as an outlet. At first this pipe is closed as is also the steam pipe from above and carbonic acid is forced into one end of the box while ethylene gas is forced into the other under equal pressure and in equal volumes. A few minutes later the steam valve above is opened and the steam forced in under the same pressure. As the gases unite the pressure falls so that the supply of each must be kept constant. At the end of half an hour the supply of gas is shut off, the outlet pipe is opened and one of the chambers is found to be filled with sirup containing 2 per cent of sugar.

The sirup is drawn off for refining and as soon as the apparatus is cool it is ready for a fresh charge. The ethylene gas can be obtained by distilling resin or grease but M Pellegrini's patent covers other hydrocarbons, such as petroleum, naphtha. The explanation is that the three gases are condensed in the pores of the pumice stone and there unite.—American Architect.

Antiquity of Smoking

In the mortar of the tower of Kirkstall abbey, which fell in the year 1779, Whittaker found that several little "smoking pipes" were found showing that the smoking of some herb or other was in use in England 400 years before tobacco was introduced. Dr. Petrie mentions that pipes of bronze for smoking are often found in ancient Irish tumuli. In the monument of Donough O'Brien, king of Thomond, who was killed A. D. 1267 and interred in the abbey of Corcumroe, County Clare, he is represented with a short pipe, or dudeen, in his mouth.

It may be observed that in some very ancient coal workings, which were found under Lambton castle some 30 years ago, some of these very old smoking pipes were found, and a generation or two ago not far from Lambton very poor old folks might often be seen smoking the contents of white wood yarrow, a herb frequently found in country churchyards.—Newcastle Chronicle.

Sailed the Seas 38 Years

Capt. A. P. Loud is a prominent resident of Hampden, Me. For 38 years he sailed the seas and upon retiring from that calling was appointed by the U. S. government to superintend its interests in the Alaska seal fisheries, a position he held five years. In speaking of his experience, he says "For several years I was greatly troubled with nervousness and a pain in the region of my heart. It was almost impossible for me to get rest and sleep. Physicians from New York to San Francisco did me no good, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure speedily and completely cured me. I owe my present and excellent health to them.

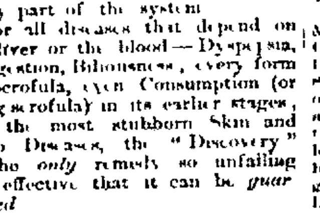
The Smelt.

It is the opinion of the true gourmet that of all marine panfish there is none to compare with the smelt (Osmerus mordax). This primary rank is its own by reason of its delicacy and delicious flavor, and when fried a light brown in very fine bread crumbs and served with melted butter there is none that disputes its pre-eminence. Its delightful flavor however as well as its peculiar odor is evanescent. Like the mackerel it cannot be too fresh.

It is from its odor that the smelt derives not only its familiar but Latin name an odor so aggressive of sliced cucumbers that if its presence be manifest only [illegible] smell people are often deluded into such supposition. This odor is not marked except in the freshly caught fish and disappears in the cooking giving place, however, to a fitting resurrection of the smelt to an olfactory sense still more savory and delightful.—Mark [illegible] Review.

The coldest day ever known in England was Dec. 25, 1[illegible] when the mercury stood 1[illegible] degrees below zero on a Fahrenheit thermometer. We would call that fine winter weather in America.



THE WEAKEST SPOT in your whole system, perhaps, is the liver. If that doesn't do its work of purifying the blood, more troubles come from it than you can remember

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts upon this weak spot as nothing else can. It rouses it up to healthy, natural action. By thoroughly purifying the blood, it reaches, builds up, and invigorates every part of the system.

For all diseases that depend on the liver or the blood—Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, every form of Scrofula, even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages, and the most stubborn Skin and Scalp Diseases, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so unfailing and effective that it can be guaranteed.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

On these terms, it's an insult to your intelligence to have something else offered as "just as good."

$40.00 PER WEEK FOR WILLING WORKERS

of either sex, any age, in any part of the country, at the employment which we furnish. You need not be away from home over night. You can give your whole time to the work, or only your spare moments. As capital is not required you run no risk. We supply you with all that is needed. It will cost you nothing to try the business. Any one can do the work. Beginners make money from the start. Failure is unknown with our workers. Every hour you labor you can easily make a dollar. No one who is willing to work fails to make more money every day than can be made in three days at any ordinary employment. Send for free book containing the fullest information.
